

I am always reminded that still-life as a genre really is a methods-and-medium based inquiry, and less a conceptual one. I feel it ends up having more to do with the approach to materials... When working on such a painting I pass a sign at some point that reads "Abandon hope all ye who enter here" in reference to my conceptual concerns. It really is just getting the images in the work to settle down and be, well, still.